METHODOLOGY:

This bill requires public bodies to review meeting minutes withheld from public disclosure at least every 10 years to determine whether they should continue to be withheld. Minutes not reviewed after 10 years shall be made public.

The Department of Justice states there are a number of public bodies attached to the Department of Justice. This bill would require public bodies at a minimum of every ten years to review non-public minutes and determine whether to unseal the minutes. There would be an indeterminable additional cost related to staff time and resources to implement the tracking and updating of meeting minutes. It is unknown how frequently a public body may choose to review its minutes.

The New Hampshire Municipal Association suggests additional costs may be incurred for staff time necessary to produce the minutes that were voted to be kept from the public by a public body prior to the enactment of the “list” requirement of RSA 91-A:3 and for staff to provide the minutes to the public body for review. The amount of time and cost will depend on the body’s record keeping and the volume of undisclosed minutes. Some public bodies will likely see a de minimis additional cost, due to the initial review requirement spanning 10 years. Other record keepers and public bodies may see significant additional costs due to file keeping structures that do not lend themselves to quick file retrieval. However, costs will depend upon the willingness of the public body and record keeper to search the archives of undisclosed minutes. Some public bodies may choose not to review minutes prior to a certain date and allow those to lapse into the public view after the initial 10 year period. Therefore, it is not possible to estimate the impact of the bill on local expenditures.

The New Hampshire Association of Counties indicates no fiscal impact is anticipated as the execution of reviewing, storing, and posting nonpublic meeting minutes can be incorporated into existing processes with existing resources.
